

ABSTRACT

5 Material is deposited on a substrate layer by forming a multilayered structure and dipping the multilayered structure into a solution containing the material for a sufficient length of time to allow the solution to spread through capillary action to a predetermined region. The multilayered structure is formed by coating the substrate layer with a spacer/pattern layer that defines the predetermined region and pressing a cover layer against the space/pattern layer.